13. Other: ____.

Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: the examiner will maintain all rejections from the final rejection. The applicants argue that the claims exclude the polyoxyalkylamine component of the Primeaux, II references and that the references preclude the aspartic ester from reacting directly with the isocyanate. Firstly, the claims are drawn to a coating composition "comprising a binder," which leaves the claims open to additional binder components as long as the binder consisting essentially of components a-e is present. Secondly, it is the examiner's position that the "consisting essentially of" language still would not exclude additional components. The MPEP is clear that only those components which have been shown to materially affect the basic and novel characteristics of the invention are excluded by "consisting essentially of" language. The applicants have provided no such evidence. To the contrary, the specification and claims themselves suggest that the addition of further reactive polymeric or oligomeric components would be welcome. It is also the examiner's position that the references teach pre-blending and not reacting the aspartic ester component and polyether polyamine components. The references are clear that the aspartic ester component reacts with the isocyanate component. Regarding the 103 rejections, the examiner has pointed to secondary references for teachings of certain components. The examiner has pointed to the references' teachings of the claimed components and provided motivation for combination with the primary references. The secondary references teach why the preferred components would be added to polyurethane or polyurea compositions. Regarding the Wolf reference, section 2.2 teaches how secondary antioxidants are added to improve long-term stabilization under thermal conditions. Section 2.3 teaches that those secondary antioxidants mentioned in section 2.2 act by decomposing hydroperoxide compounds.
